

Meet our ECMC Research Nurses:

Kay Wilson, Cardiff ECMC

Being an ECMC Nurse...gives us an identity. It also enables us to link with other centres in the Network.

The most challenging part of the role...are the studies. They are intense, and it's an emotive role because the patients and families are looking to you for hope.

The most rewarding element...is being everything to patients: nurse specialist, research nurse, treatment nurse, main contact.

“Nursing is something I always wanted to do. Being an ECMC Nurse gives us an identity.”

Vivienne Wilson, Edinburgh-Dundee ECMC

The most challenging part of the role... is implementing clinical trials into general practice.

The most rewarding element... is being involved in new treatments for cancer.

I became a nurse because... I always wanted to be one – I like looking after people.

My advice is... go for it and take any opportunity.
